Grace-filled Student Life Steering Committee member and director of student leadership development, Stephanie Lee, believes that the time has come for Union to move from a rules oriented approach to student life to a grace-filled approach grounded in the Great Commandment. "Especially in an environment where we claim a belief structure, the integration of faith and learning is the most natural way to live in a community," said Lee.

"Move from a rules oriented approach to a grace-filled approach grounded in the Great Commandment," said Stephanie Lee, Steering Committee member and director of student leadership development. "The main thing I am excited about is that the door is being opened to discuss change," said Phillips.

"Move the campus away from traditional rules. The vision for this plan is to move from a rules oriented approach to student life to a grace-filled approach grounded in the Great Commandment," said Dockery. The plan is headed by the Grace-filled Student Life Steering Committee. The committee consists of nine students, three staff members and three faculty members. "The committee will meet for the first time in April to discuss our vision," said Stephanie Lee, committee member and director of student leadership development. "A covenant relationship is far more honorable, demands more individual responsibility and is the most natural way to live in a community," said Livingstone.

"As Margaret Thatcher’s successor and President Bush’s partner in the Gulf War, John Major had a significant impact on Britain and the world during the past decade," said David S. Dockery.

Major has had a significant impact on Britain and the world during the past decade. He became prime minister in 1979, the same year Margaret Thatcher became prime minister, and rapidly soared through the Conservative party leadership. In 1990, he succeeded Thatcher as prime minister, where he served for seven years, battling economic recession, violence in Northern Ireland and British partnerships with the U.S. in the Persian Gulf War.

"There is a long tradition at Union that student life is governed by rules and sanctions. The responsibility has belonged to the administration. "I believe the time has come when we have the quality of students, the trust of our constituencies and the support of the Board of Trustees to move to a different way of thinking about student life," said President David S. Dockery.

"Areas of student life that could be affected by what Dockery refers to as a ‘covenant’ include residence life, chapel, discipline, campus ministry, spiritual life and the integration of faith and learning. "Overall, I am very much in favor of any process that moves us from legalism to responsibility," said Dr. Ann Livingstone, associate professor of political science.

"Especially in an environment where we claim a belief structure, because all of our behavior should come from what we believe," said Livingstone.
