New LIFE group leaders prepare to serve

By Laural Smith
News Editor

The applications have been turned in, the interviews are over and the LIFE Group leaders have been chosen.

The leaders for the 2001-2002 school year include seniors Bethany Davis, Daniel Duncan, Ashley Foster, Matt Glass, Mallard and Wesson both attended Central High School in Knoxville, Tenn. Wesson is now a nurse in the middle school where Mallard’s brother is a coach. Since it was a larger high school and Wesson and Mallard were two years apart, the two did not know each other that well. “I was dating a guy, and he started dating her, so that’s really how I got to know her,” said Mallard. Even though she is familiar with the show, Mallard does not regularly watch “Survivor.” “I just saw one episode to see what she looked like,” said Mallard.

From what she remembers about Wesson, Mallard believes that her outgoing personality, ambition and determination led to her success on the show.

Steve Beverly, assistant professor of communication arts and game show expert, picked Wesson as his favorite to win. “I think she is the most two-faced of everyone of the players,” said Beverly. “She is probably the most transparent, manipulative person in the entire game.”

Unlike the first season of “Survivor,” the results for “Survivor II” were revealed live on the air.

The build up of suspense throughout the season makes viewers want a surprise ending, according to Beverly. “With shows like this, people don’t like to know in advance,” said Beverly.

CBS aired the season finale of its hit game show “Survivor II: The Australian Outback” on Thursday, May 3, followed by an hour long reunion with the contestants.

Following the success of last summer’s original, this spring “Survivor II” repeatedly beat NBC’s hit show “Friends” in the ratings on Thursday nights.

Keith Famie, 2nd runner up, was voted off by Colby after the last survivor challenge.

Sole Survivor: Tina Wesson is congratulated by runner-up Colby Donaldson on Thursday night after Wesson won a million dollars and Donaldson won $100,000.

---

Tina survives the challenge

By Julie Dodson
Copy Editor

Kina Mallard, department chair and associate professor of communication arts, knew Tina Wesson was ambitious, but she didn’t know it would make her a millionaire.

Wesson won the $1 million dollar grand prize Thursday night on the finale of “Survivor II: The Australian Outback.”

After originally starting out with 16, only three finalists lasted long enough to compete for the main prize.

Cubby Donaldson, 26, a single custom auto designer from Dallas, Texas, Keith Famie, 40, a single chef from West Bloomfield, Mich. and Wesson, 40, a married nurse from Knoxville, Tenn. were the three “survivors” who made it to the finale.

Mallard and Wesson both attended Central High School in Knoxville, Tenn. Wesson is now a nurse in the middle school where Mallard’s brother is a coach. Since it was a larger high school and Wesson and Mallard were two years apart, the two did not know each other that well. “I was dating a guy, and he started dating her, so that’s really how I got to know her,” said Mallard. Even though she is familiar with the show, Mallard does not regularly watch “Survivor.” “I just saw one episode to see what she looked like,” said Mallard.

From what she remembers about Wesson, Mallard believes that her outgoing personality, ambition and determination led to her success on the show.

Steve Beverly, assistant professor of communication arts and game show expert, picked Wesson as his favorite to win. “I think she is the most two-faced of everyone of the players,” said Beverly. “She is probably the most transparent, manipulative person in the entire game.”

Unlike the first season of “Survivor,” the results for “Survivor II” were revealed live on the air.

The build up of suspense throughout the season makes viewers want a surprise ending, according to Beverly. “With shows like this, people don’t like to know in advance,” said Beverly.

CBS aired the season finale of its hit game show “Survivor II: The Australian Outback” on Thursday, May 3, followed by an hour long reunion with the contestants.

Following the success of last summer’s original, this spring “Survivor II” repeatedly beat NBC’s hit show “Friends” in the ratings on Thursday nights.

Keith Famie, 2nd runner up, was voted off by Colby after the last survivor challenge.

Sole Survivor: Tina Wesson is congratulated by runner-up Colby Donaldson on Thursday night after Wesson won a million dollars and Donaldson won $100,000.

---

New LIFE group leaders prepare to serve

By Laural Smith
News Editor

The applications have been turned in, the interviews are over and the LIFE Group leaders have been chosen.

The leaders for the 2001-2002 school year include seniors Bethany Davis, Daniel Duncan, Ashley Foster, Matt Glass, Mallard and Wesson both attended Central High School in Knoxville, Tenn. Wesson is now a nurse in the middle school where Mallard’s brother is a coach. Since it was a larger high school and Wesson and Mallard were two years apart, the two did not know each other that well. “I was dating a guy, and he started dating her, so that’s really how I got to know her,” said Mallard. Even though she is familiar with the show, Mallard does not regularly watch “Survivor.” “I just saw one episode to see what she looked like,” said Mallard.

From what she remembers about Wesson, Mallard believes that her outgoing personality, ambition and determination led to her success on the show.

Steve Beverly, assistant professor of communication arts and game show expert, picked Wesson as his favorite to win. “I think she is the most two-faced of everyone of the players,” said Beverly. “She is probably the most transparent, manipulative person in the entire game.”

Unlike the first season of “Survivor,” the results for “Survivor II” were revealed live on the air.

The build up of suspense throughout the season makes viewers want a surprise ending, according to Beverly. “With shows like this, people don’t like to know in advance,” said Beverly.

CBS aired the season finale of its hit game show “Survivor II: The Australian Outback” on Thursday, May 3, followed by an hour long reunion with the contestants.

Following the success of last summer’s original, this spring “Survivor II” repeatedly beat NBC’s hit show “Friends” in the ratings on Thursday nights.

Keith Famie, 2nd runner up, was voted off by Colby after the last survivor challenge.

Sole Survivor: Tina Wesson is congratulated by runner-up Colby Donaldson on Thursday night after Wesson won a million dollars and Donaldson won $100,000.

---

Tina survives the challenge

By Julie Dodson
Copy Editor

Kina Mallard, department chair and associate professor of communication arts, knew Tina Wesson was ambitious, but she didn’t know it would make her a millionaire.

Wesson won the $1 million dollar grand prize Thursday night on the finale of “Survivor II: The Australian Outback.”

After originally starting out with 16, only three finalists lasted long enough to compete for the main prize.

Cubby Donaldson, 26, a single custom auto designer from Dallas, Texas, Keith Famie, 40, a single chef from West Bloomfield, Mich. and Wesson, 40, a married nurse from Knoxville, Tenn. were the three “survivors” who made it to the finale.

Mallard and Wesson both attended Central High School in Knoxville, Tenn. Wesson is now a nurse in the middle school where Mallard’s brother is a coach. Since it was a larger high school and Wesson and Mallard were two years apart, the two did not know each other that well. “I was dating a guy, and he started dating her, so that’s really how I got to know her,” said Mallard. Even though she is familiar with the show, Mallard does not regularly watch “Survivor.” “I just saw one episode to see what she looked like,” said Mallard.

From what she remembers about Wesson, Mallard believes that her outgoing personality, ambition and determination led to her success on the show.

Steve Beverly, assistant professor of communication arts and game show expert, picked Wesson as his favorite to win. “I think she is the most two-faced of everyone of the players,” said Beverly. “She is probably the most transparent, manipulative person in the entire game.”

Unlike the first season of “Survivor,” the results for “Survivor II” were revealed live on the air.

The build up of suspense throughout the season makes viewers want a surprise ending, according to Beverly. “With shows like this, people don’t like to know in advance,” said Beverly.

CBS aired the season finale of its hit game show “Survivor II: The Australian Outback” on Thursday, May 3, followed by an hour long reunion with the contestants. Following the success of last summer’s original, this spring “Survivor II” repeatedly beat NBC’s hit show “Friends” in the ratings on Thursday nights.

Keith Famie, 2nd runner up, was voted off by Colby after the last survivor challenge.

Sole Survivor: Tina Wesson is congratulated by runner-up Colby Donaldson on Thursday night after Wesson won a million dollars and Donaldson won $100,000.